

“The dualistic nature of thought is a root of our suffering. Whenever we think of ourselves as separate, fear and attachment arise and we grow constricted, defensive, ambitious and territorial. To protect the separate self, we push certain things away, while to bolster it we hold on to other things and identify with them.”

Jack Kornfield, A Path With Heart