

There is dew on these poems in the morning,
and at night a cool breeze may rise from them.

In the winter they are blankets; in the summer a place to swim.

I like talking to you like this. Have you moved a step closer?

Soon we may be kissing.

Kabir (1449-1518)